FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE—

Chemical Corps Research and Development

BY BRIG. GEN. WM. M. CREESEY, USA
Commanding General, Chemical Corps Research and Engineering Command

It is the responsibility of military research and development organizations to insure that our military forces, both combat and supply, can be furnished equipment and techniques that are superior to those available to any potential enemy. This responsibility is qualitative. Other agencies must determine whether the items or systems should or should not be utilized under any particular set of circumstances and in what quantities they will be required.

Brig. Gen. Creasey

In the case of the Army Chemical Corps Research and Engineering Command, our specific mission is the above qualitative responsibility in the fields of chemical, biological and radiological (CBR) warfare.

To be sure, we do not do all the work ourselves, but we do have, with the sole exception of radiological defense, CBR responsibilities for the entire Department of Defense. It is our charge to insure that there is a well-coordinated, comprehensive program moving forward in a timely manner without gaps and without undesirable duplication.

How, then, is this mission approached? Necessarily, there are a number of basic philosophies that must be considered and then accepted or rejected prior to the establishment of any organizational structure.

We believe, basically, first: That since the trained combat man with his equipment will be the decisive factor in battle, the inadequately equipped army will be the losing army. There must be prompt response to the user's stated (or implied) requirements but, in addition, the developer must be free to challenge these and to suggest new or alternate concepts and requirements; second: That military research and development, where possible, must ride on the crest of national accomplishments in allied areas; third: That where normal civilian or industrial pressures leave gaps in the broad program, defense dollars must be utilized to fill these gaps and, further, the same dollars must frequently be utilized to speed the attainment of certain specific military objectives; fourth: That neither the military man, the civilian scientist

CNO Leads Survivors Benefits Appeal

Vice Adm. William M. Fechteler, USN, Chief of Naval Operations, who said he has long been "a strong advocate of legislation to grant personnel of the military services the right to share their retirement compensation with their surviving widows and minor children," was the top ranking Defense spokesman as House Armed Services Committee hearings opened this week on H.R. 2521.

The bill, sponsored by Representative Cole (R-NY) would permit members of the Armed Forces to elect contingency options regarding retirement pay.

Admiral Fechteler said the action is "long overdue." He said "I believe this to be as important a piece of personnel legislation as it has been my privilege to support before you during my many years of service as Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Personnel and in my present capacity as Chief of Naval Operations."

On behalf of the Air Force, Col. L. W. Montgomery said that "we have long recognized a serious omission in our relationship with our retired members in that no provision has been made for the surviving dependents of a former member who dies after retirement."

Colonel Montgomery commented that a peculiar situation exists "wherein the Services will pay the member retired pay for so long as he shall live in retirement, but, for example, should he be killed on the second day of his retirement, there is no recognition of an obligation to the surviving widow or children."

"It appears that the only acceptable solution is to provide the retired member an opportunity to receive a reduced amount of his retired pay in order to provide an annuity for his family," said Colonel Montgomery.

Commenting on the proposed legislation, Admiral Fechteler said:

"The principle of a contingency option is not new. It is a privilege granted to all government employees other than the military, and in one form or another is present in nearly all industrial retirement plans. I have in the past supported many other bills designed to provide more adequate benefits to survivors of retired personnel and I can say positively that the bill which is before you today is the best plan of this nature which has been presented for your consideration."

"The application of the principle of a contingency option to the military is long overdue. It is not my intention to burden this Committee with the hardships and vicissitudes suffered by the survivors of retired personnel in the past. I can only assure you that they are real, present and fearful to contemplate. The speedy enactment of this bill should alleviate this condition in the future."

Pentagon Sends Pay Raise Proposal To Budget Bureau For Top Approval

W. O. BILL READIED

The Defense Department and the Bureau of the Budget, in a burst of speed after more than three years of delays, late this week were polishing a Warrant Officer Promotion Bill for transmittal to Congress before the end of the month.

The BOB made 10 changes in a Pentagon proposed bill. Six of the changes were agreed to by the Defense Department. The other four were being discussed this week. Informed officials felt confident a bill would soon reach Congress.

Army May Try New Two Platoon Shift

The Army may go into a two platoon shift this summer to save money and manpower and to build up combat team spirit.

Not yet finally approved, but likely to be ordered on a test basis is a plan which would result in the shipment overseas of Replacement Platoons instead of individual replacements.

Changes in the basic training program will be necessary in implementing the R. P. program.

During the next few months, it is anticipated the Army will experiment with the formation and shipment of Replacement Platoons from the Zone of Interior. The first of these units probably will be sent to the Far East Command to replace platoons in Korea.

Under consideration is a carefully worked out plan which would shape replacements into a compact unit of about 35 enlisted men and one officer during basic training. Additional "fillers," probably including combat-experienced men and ROKs, would be added overseas.

The R. P. would train together, would remain together while travelling overseas and then would serve together with combat units.

It is anticipated that money and manpower economies would be realized by shipping men in groups instead of sending them as individuals. Time-in-travel is expected to be reduced by days, if not weeks. Records will be kept intact and embarkation port delays resulting from administrative deficiencies will be eliminated.

The emphasis on unit esprit, say proponents of the P. R. plan, will keep the AWOL rate to a minimum.

The creation of Platoon Replacement units would be in keeping with the desire of the Army Chief of Staff, General J. Lawton Collins to foster unit pride at all Army levels.

The Defense Department, in a major policy switch consistent with the new emphasis on bolstering attractiveness of military careers, has endorsed a proposal for an Armed Forces cost-of-living pay adjustment—and on even more liberal terms than had been sought by a leading Congressional pay raise advocate.

The action could mean the initiation during the current session of Congressional hearings on a military pay boost.

The Pentagon has called upon the Bureau of the Budget, which acts for the President, to indicate the Administration's official attitude toward a pay adjustment for members of the Uniformed Services at the present time.

Budget Bureau experts have been studying the military pay situation for several weeks.

President Eisenhower, it is recalled, early this month directed the Defense Department to investigate the problem of "attracting and holding competent career personnel."

The Pentagon inquiry, although not yet completed, is known to have established the fact that the relative slippage in military pay in comparison to wages and salaries in civilian life is a major deterrent to obtaining and retaining outstanding men and women for military careers.

Always chary about discussing matters pending before the Bureau of the Budget—particularly so when pay matters are involved—Defense officials persisted this week in declining to confirm Secretary Charles E. Wilson's support for a military pay adjustment.

THE JOURNAL disclosed on 9 May that a plan to tie military pay to the Cost-of-Living Index was "gaining surprising favor" with Mr. Wilson. Defense officials then, as now, would not comment on the report.

Notwithstanding the understandable reluctance of Pentagon authorities to discuss the pay situation, the following facts can be stated:

In January, Representative James E. Van Zandt (R-Pa.) introduced H.R. 1437. This measure would require annual review of military pay in relationship to the Cost-of-Living Index. Its passage would probably mean about an 8 per cent increase in pay.

However, Mr. Van Zandt's measure, as introduced, would apply only to base pay. The Pentagon now wants any cost-of-living pay adjustment to apply to allowances as well as base pay.

For the past several months, the Defense Department had been opposed to any pay raise for military personnel. This opposition was made known at Mr. Wilson's first press conference on 20 March when he was asked if he supported the proposal of his predecessor,

Air Action Increases, Jet Aces Grounded

Action in Korea, especially in the air, increased considerably this week as hopes for an armistice agreement at Panmunjom dimmed.

Sabret jet pilots had their greatest week in months. In six days of fighting, UN pilots scored 36 kills, 2 MIG's probably destroyed and 16 others damaged. It also was a week that saw the crowning of the war's first triple jet ace, Capt. Joseph McConnell, Jr. Competition between Captain McConnell, and his nearest rival, Capt. Manuel Fernandez, who has shot down 14 MIG's, reached a high pitch during the week, but both men were ordered grounded and returned to this country.

Allied fighter-bombers were busy in the north. In a series of raids that lasted 10 hours, 284 planes destroyed 92 buildings at a military center near Chinampo, the port city for the North Korean capital of Pyongyang.

In the heaviest ground action since last fall, the Communists sent 4,000 troops on a hit-and-run maneuver on the central front, and the UN estimated at least 1,300 Reds were slain before the enemy finally retreated. The previous day, some 2,000 enemy troops attacked Turkish soldiers on Vegas and the twin outposts of Berlin and East Berlin. After heavy fighting, the enemy was thrown back with 400 casualties.

The war's two leading jet killers were neck-to-neck in their race as the week opened. Captain Fernandez, in scoring his 13th and 14th MIG, set a new record. Captain McConnell brought his total to 13 and then boosted it to 16 last Monday when he shot down three enemy jets in one day's work. Captain Fernandez completed his 125th mission during the week and applied for permission to make 150 sorties before being rotated back to the United States. Captain McConnell, who has flown on 106 missions since 31 January, also requested permission to fly 44 more missions. The requests of both men were refused and they were ordered grounded and returned home. The refusals were based on the two pilots' need for well-earned rest and because their combat experience was too valuable to risk losing. Meanwhile, it was disclosed that Maj. James Jabara, the war's first jet ace, now on his second tour of duty in Korea, shot down his 7th MIG.

Brush Hit; Nine Injured

Nine men were wounded late last week aboard the USS Brush off North Korea when the destroyer was hit by Communist shore-battery fire.

A heavy caliber shell, one of 20 fired at the ship, struck in the forward five-inch mount, injuring all but two members of the 11-man gun crew. Six of the men were injured seriously. They are: Gunners Mate 1/c Arnold August Crete, Gunners Mate 3/c William Remy Nash, Gunners Mate 3/c Joseph John Valentine, Gunners Mate Seaman Lloyd Marion McCord, Seaman Harold V. Ballard and Seaman Donald Duwayne Norskog.

Those sustaining minor injuries were: Torpedoman's Mate Seaman Billy Wayne Melson, Seaman Ronald Peter Erwin and Seaman Ronald Roy Wooten.

The Brush returned to patrol in the Wonsan sector after transferring her wounded to other ships. The destroyer, which was serving as flagship for Capt. Harold G. Bowen, Jr., Commander, Destroyer Division 22, is commanded by Comdr. D. F. Quigley, USN.

New 45th Div. CofS

Col. James D. Alger has succeeded Col. Claude N. Shaver as Chief of Staff for the Army's 45th Division in Korea. Colonel Shaver has been reassigned to Headquarters, Far East Command, in Tokyo. Prior to his new assignment, Colonel Alger was with the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

Complete Text of C-of-L Pay Raise Bill Said to Have Received Pentagon Support

FOLLOWING is the complete text of H.R. 1437, the cost-of-living pay raise bill, sponsored by Representative Van Zandt (R-Pa.) which reportedly has been approved in principle by the Defense Department and sent to the Bureau of the Budget.

A BILL

Relating to the annual adjustment of the basic pay of members of the uniformed services.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the purposes of this Act—

(d) The term "standard" means that Consumers' Price Index figure of 168.5 published by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics which reflected a ratio of cost on October 1, 1949, of specific sampled items to the average cost of those particular items during the period 1935-1939.

(e) The term "basic pay" means rates of pay, not including incentive pay, hazardous-duty pay, special pay, or allowances, authorized by law for members of the uniformed services effective on or after October 1, 1949.

Sec. 2. The basic pay of all members of the uniformed services is hereby declared to be based on the standard and the President shall examine annually on the 15th day of May the status of the index in relation to the standard. Whenever he shall determine from such examination that the index has either risen above or fallen below the standard, an adjustment in the basic pay of all members of the uniformed services in accordance with such rise or fall is hereby authorized subject to the limitations imposed in section 3 of this Act and shall be effected as of July 1 of the calendar year in which such determination is made.

Sec. 3. Under such regulations as the President may prescribe pursuant to the authority contained in this Act, an adjustment in the basic pay of all members of the uniformed services shall be effected only in accordance with the following formula: For each rise or fall of 75 one-hundredths of 1 per cent in the index in relation to the standard the basic pay of all members of the uniformed services shall be increased or reduced correspondingly in the amount of 1 per centum (computed to the nearest one-half of 1 per centum) of the basic pay of such members: Provided, That no adjustment in basic pay of members of the uniformed services shall be effected when the index has risen or fallen less than 3 per centum in relation to the standard in any one calendar year: Provided further, That when a cumulative rise or fall in the index in relation to the standard over any period of successive calendar years shall equal 3 per centum since the last such prior adjustment in basic pay of all members of the uniformed services, the basic pay of all members of the uniformed services shall be adjusted to conform with such rise or fall in accordance with the formula prescribed in this section.

Wins 7th Silver Star

Brig. Gen. Derrill M. Daniel, Assistant Division Commander of the 7th Infantry Division, has been awarded three decorations within the past six weeks.

A seventh Oak Leaf Cluster, presented in lieu of the Silver Star, was awarded for his personal supervision and reorganization of a strategic outpost which was under heavy enemy artillery and mortar fire.

A third Oak Leaf Cluster for the Bronze Star Medal was awarded General Daniel for heroic achievement near Sidmark, Korea, last March. And he received the Legion of Merit for "exceptionally meritorious conduct in for performance of outstanding service" between 8 Sept. 1952 and 20 April 1953.

Navy Cuts Air Racket

The Navy said this week it is making strides in the reduction of noise-nuisance in areas near Naval air facilities.

"During the past year considerable progress has been made in minimizing noise at undesirable hours and reducing areas in which it occurs," the Navy said. It was pointed out that noise reduction is a continuing goal of Naval aviation.

"Where it is consistent with national defense requirements," the Navy said, "flights are now scheduled so that take-offs occur after 7 a. m. Routine night flying is usually completed by 11 p. m."

"Under the new program preferential runways are used, wherever possible, to avoid take-offs and approaches over congested areas adjacent to airfields. In addition, low propeller pitch only is used on take-offs and for final approaches on landings."

Noises are further reduced by:

- 1-Prohibiting low altitude traffic over populated areas wherever possible.
- 2-Urging pilots to fly higher than the 1,000-foot minimum altitude set by CAA.
- 3-Installing silencers on certain test stands.
- 4-Conducting engine "turn-ups" between 7 a. m. and 11 p. m.

Atom Cuts Told As

Yucca Tests Continue

A proposed 30 per cent slash in the funds requested by former President Truman for the Atomic Energy Commission during the 1954 fiscal year was disclosed this week as the Commission announced that a pilotless drone plane had successfully flown through the flame and heat of an atomic blast.

Representative W. Sterling Cole (R-NY), chairman of the Joint Congressional Atomic Energy Committee said the reductions would mean the elimination of certain programs, including the development of atomic energy engines for an aircraft carrier and an airplane. He also said the lower budget would delay experiments on industrial utilization of atomic power.

Representative Cole said he believed that the revised figures were determined by the National Security Council, of which President Eisenhower is chairman.

The chairman said that construction would continue on the two types of atomic-powered engines for submarines, as would research on power units for an aircraft carrier and airplane. However, construction of reactors for the latter two projects would have to be postponed, he indicated.

The drone plane which survived the atomic blast at Yucca Flat, Nev., this week was a single-engine, propeller-driven Navy AD-2 Skyraider. In a previous effort, a pilotless plane had crashed while trying to penetrate the thermal (heat) envelope.

Col. Pappas 1st Cav. G-4

Lt. Col. Christopher L. Pappas has been appointed G-4 of the 1st Cavalry Division, it was announced in Korea by Maj. Gen. Joseph P. Cleland, 1st Cavalry Division commanding general.

Lt. Col. Pappas replaces Lt. Col. Joseph B. Franklin who rotated to the ZI and a new post at the Pentagon in Washington, D. C. Colonel Franklin had served 18 months with the division.

Pay Raise

Robert A. Lovett, for a military pay raise.

Secretary Wilson responded with a question. He asked, apparently rhetorically, whether uniformed personnel had not recently received a pay raise. It was immediately reported and never denied that Secretary Wilson was not in sympathy with the Truman Administration request for a military cost-of-living pay adjustment.

Then came the Strauss Commission report which recommended that military pay be adjusted to the cost-of-living. This was followed by the Rockefeller Commission report which concluded its document on Defense Department reorganization with the statement that "it was, on several occasions, brought to our attention that the inducements and rewards of the civilian and military career services may not have kept pace with the attractiveness of private enterprise."

Most importantly, there was also the expression by the President of his concern over the problem of attracting and holding competent personnel.

In line with the Strauss Commission report, the Air Force maintained that in addition to base pay and allowances, incentive pay should also be geared to the cost-of-living.

This proposal reportedly has not yet been approved by the Defense Department.

Meantime, on Capitol Hill, Representative Van Zandt, a senior member of the Armed Services Committee and a captain in the Naval Reserve, told THE JOURNAL this week that "I am confident the Defense Department will support a cost-of-living pay raise for our servicemen."

Representative Van Zandt's concern for the losses in military pay benefits is not new. Two years ago, he sponsored legislation to link pay to the cost-of-living.

He has told THE JOURNAL that "we have always waited too long in the past to adjust military pay to the cost-of-living." He has stated that "something must be done to alleviate the hardships which have resulted."

Whether the Bureau of the Budget will agree with the Defense Department that now is the time for a military pay adjustment remains to be seen.

An early decision is expected.

AF Academy Receives Powerful Support

The Air Force Academy, for which General Hoyt S. Vandenberg has fought hard throughout his service as Chief of Staff, received powerful support this week. Secretary Harold E. Talbott announced that with the "enthusiastic approval" of President Eisenhower and Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson, the Air Force will ask Congress once again to authorize a third Service Academy.

A Pentagon announcement stated that Congress will be asked to authorize Secretary Talbott to appoint a commission to advise him in connection with selection of a site for the Academy. The Air Force has already had one such commission.

The Defense Department and the Air Force then would proceed, in consultation with civilian educators and others, to develop the educational program.

Mr. Talbott and Dr. John A. Hannah, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower and Personnel, said "the Department of the Air Force's purpose is to utilize the experiences of West Point and Annapolis to create the best possible institution for the graduating of junior officers dedicated and trained for a career of leadership in the Air Force."

It was while serving as vice chairman of the Service Academy Board in Feb. 1950 that President Eisenhower, then head of Columbia University, advocated the establishment of an Air Force Academy. The Board was under the chairmanship of Dr. Robert L. Stearns, president of the University of Colorado.

Air Force officials, conceding that they may be optimistic on the basis of the past history of the AF Academy proposal, were elated with the decision to press for an authorization bill during the current session.

They expressed the hope that the Air Force Academy would be authorized—appropriations would then be possible—before General Vandenberg retires on 30 June.

At the present time, the Air Force receives 25 per cent of the graduating classes at West Point and Annapolis. This year, the Air Force obtained its full quota of volunteers, although last year's quota at West Point was not filled.

A bill calling for the establishment of an Air Force Academy was introduced in Congress by Chairman Dewey Short (R-Mo.) of the House Armed Services Committee early in the present session (H.R. 2328). His is not the only bill.

Other members of Congress have introduced similar measures, usually specifying the state in which it would be located.

Mr. Short's bill is the one which will be considered.

The Air Force Academy legislation has a history tracing back to the days of then Secretary of Defense Louis A. Johnson, who supported such an institution. Subsequently, it gained the support of Secretaries George C. Marshall and Robert A. Lovett.

House Group To Probe Reserve Training Program

A House Armed Services subcommittee next week will begin an investigation of the Armed Services reserve training program to determine if proper equipment and training facilities are available.

Meantime, Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson told an Armed Forces Day audience that his department would review the entire reserve program "to make certain that we are in fact creating a reserve in all of the services that will be readily available if an emergency requires it."

Hearings on the House probe will begin 27 May, Representative Leroy Johnson, (R-Calif.), subcommittee chairman, announced.

"A great deal of information has come to the attention of the various members of the House Armed Services Committee through letters from reservists and personal contact, which indicates that the reserve components of the Armed Services are not receiving the proper training, equipment and facilities that Congress intended them to have," Mr. Johnson said. "The Congress has gone on record indicating that a strong and properly trained reserve force is necessary to meet

Pentagon Studies Plan To Cut In Half Reserve Obligation Of Korean Veterans

Defense Department officials are studying a proposal—it would affect hundreds of thousands—which would reduce in half, from six to three years, the Reserve service obligation of military personnel who leave active duty after the two-year Selective Service tour.

Under present law (P.L. 51), the total Service obligation, active and reserve, is eight years.

This means in the case of a draftee that after completing two years' active duty, he must serve six years more as a member of a Civilian Component. This period of six years' affiliation is spent in the Ready Reserve.

It is possible for the draftee to cut the time in Ready Reserve status to only three years, instead of six, by serving for three years with an active Reserve Forces unit. Then the remaining three years of the obligation can be fulfilled while in the Standby Reserve—less vulnerable for call to active duty than the Ready Reserve under the Armed Forces Reserve Act.

The new plan, said to have strong support in the Pentagon, among Civilian Component leaders and among employers, would permit a draftee or enlistee to complete his six-year obligation at a greatly accelerated rate by (1) extending his active service or (2) joining a National Guard or Reserve unit after release from active duty.

The proposal, which would require Congressional approval before it could be implemented, would release a man from all Reserve obligation if he elected to remain on active duty voluntarily for one year after his Selective Service or enlistment requirement is fulfilled.

Thus, for example, a draftee by serving three years on active duty, instead of two, would be free of future mandatory service.

Another alternative in the plan now being reviewed by the Defense Department would authorize a man who serves three years with a Civilian Component unit after leaving active duty to be free of future obligation. This individual, after two years' active duty and three years' active, satisfactory service in the National Guard or Reserve, would complete the security requirements of the nation. Consequently, Representative Dewey Short, Chairman of the Committee, has instructed the subcommittee to investigate the training programs of the various reserve components. This subcommittee had been instructed to check into this situation fully and to report what is necessary to increase the capacity of the reserves to the maximum, which was suggested by the 82d Congress.

Representative Johnson said the hearings probably would take several weeks and would not be concluded until the middle of June. The subcommittee, he declared, intends to question members of the Reserve Forces Policy Board, and to hear from others connected with the reserve forces.

Use of Tactical A-Bomb Authorized For Marines

Use of the tactical atom-bomb by the Marine Corps has been authorized by the Atomic Energy Commission and two types of Marine Corps fighter-bombers have been designated to carry the potent weapon.

Announcement of the Marine A-bomb capabilities was made on authorization from Washington by Lt. Col. W. E. Crowe, Commanding Officer of the Marine Air Detachment, Naval Air Station, Dallas, Tex., to members of the Aviation Writers' Association meeting there.

It was disclosed that the two Marine planes which will carry the atomic weapon are the AD4B Douglas Skyraider and the F2H2B McDonnell Banshee.

Colonel Crowe told members of the Association that with the A-bomb capabilities, plus troop-carrying helicopters to take advantage of A-bomb assaults, the Marine Corps now possesses capabilities of a powerful new punch in which it needs only the support of Naval vessels.

plete the required service. He would not be required to serve for an additional three years in the Standby Reserve.

The service obligation changes reportedly have received stronger support in the Army than in the other Services, which have not called upon Selective Service to deliver any personnel at all, or only a limited number, as in the Marine Corps.

Defense officials believe, however, that the plan, if endorsed by the Bureau of the Budget and O.K'd by Congress, should have strong support from varied quarters. Here are some of the reasons which are cited by advocates of the plan:

- The individual serviceman would be given more liberalized options for deciding how he desires to discharge his obligation.

- The Services would benefit by the certain decision of many young men to remain on active duty for the additional year and by the increased interest in active affiliation with a Civilian Component.

- The National Guard and Reserve would gain added attractiveness and would, as a result, receive additional numbers of much-needed veteran, enlisted volunteers for unit training.

- Employers would be pleased by the opportunity for employees to discharge more quickly their service obligation and thus be free from possibility of calls to active duty.

Defense authorities point, also, that under now out-dated provisions of the Selective Service Act of 1948, a man inducted for 21 months or less could have completed his service obligation by 12 months' additional service on active duty, or by three years' service in a National Guard or Reserve unit.

These officials maintain that men leaving the Services today should not have a stiffer service obligation than was the case in the 1948 legislation, subsequently amended.

There is no secret, also, to the fact that Defense personnel experts are unhappy over the fact that current law admittedly lacks effective enforcement provisions. This has led to charges that a "Paper Reserve" is being created.

Dependent Care Hearings

The Citizens Advisory Commission on Medical Care of Dependents of Military Personnel, established by the Secretary of Defense, held its first hearings on 18 May.

Dr. Harold G. Moulton, Chairman of the Commission, extended invitations to the American Medical Association, the American Dental Association, the American Hospital Association, the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Military Order of the World Wars to have representatives appear at hearings scheduled to be held by the Commission at the Pentagon on Monday, 25 May.

Appearing before the Commission at the 18 May hearings were:

Tynes, Medical Corps, Post Surgeon, and M/Sgt. William M. Conn, all from Ft. Knox, Ky., also attended.

NAVY—Admiral D. B. Duncan, Deputy Chief of Naval Operations; Rear Adm. J. H. Bolger, Deputy Chief, Bureau of Naval Personnel; Lt. Col. B. W. Giebler, representing the Marine Corps; Rear Adm. H. LT. SARAH GRIFFING CHAPMAN, NC, USN, amputee Navy Nurse who returned to active duty to teach other amputees to walk, is awarded the Secretary of the Navy's Commendation Ribbon for her work on the staff of the U. S. Naval Hospital at Oakland, Calif. The presentation was made on the 45th Anniversary of the Navy Nurse Corps by Rear Adm. A. H. Dearing, MC, USN, Inspector of Pacific Coast Navy Medical Activities and 12th Naval District Medical Officer.

JCS Chief Sees Heavy Military Costs Ahead

General of the Army Omar N. Bradley has estimated that it will cost "on the order of three billion dollars a month, as far into the future as we can possibly foresee" to maintain adequate defense forces, continue military aid to our allies and operate in the cold war.

The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, speaking before the Women's National Press Club on 15 May, said his prediction of costs "must be a gloomy one" to those who would put economy ahead of security. "But this tenuous peace, with its cold war overtones, is so much less costly than total war that we should willingly pay the price," he declared.

Defense Arithmetic

General Bradley made it plain that, in discussing the "arithmetic of national defense," he did "not have the present budget in mind." He said the "question of how much we can afford to spend before we jeopardize our economy is not my responsibility or the responsibility of the Joint Chiefs of Staff."

He said, "It is a very difficult decision and one which we military men do not have to make. It is tough enough to estimate the levels of preparedness—to make an estimate of the size and equipment of the ground, sea, and air forces that we must have—before we can be assured of a relative degree of security."

He noted that "In the process of rebuilding our armed strength and fighting the Communists in Korea, we have recently reached a rate of expenditure of approximately four billion dollars a month," and said "if these heavy expenditures are the requirement for a steadfast build-up of our Armed Forces to a point of relative security, while we continue to fight aggression in Korea, I feel sure that this nation can afford the financial investment. When I think that the alternative is a nation too weak to protect the freedom we have worked for, then I say we must be able to afford it."

Long-Range Basis

General Bradley said "we must conclude that our military preparedness, must be continued on a long-range basis, as economically as possible, but without jeopardizing our future—either by inviting attack through weakness, or risking our economy by overspending on armaments."

The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs mentioned that he soon will be leaving that post, and he paid tribute to the "distinguished officers" who have been his colleagues on the JCS. He said "These men served our country without prejudice or partisanship and without any political bias—always striving to protect the best interests and the security of our nation."

Combine Three Approach Systems At Patuxent

The Navy disclosed this week that it has installed a Composite Approach Light System at the Naval Air Test Center, Patuxent River, Md.

The announcement, made at the Aviation Writers Association convention in Dallas, Tex., said three major systems were combined at Patuxent to make up the new landing system. These were the Crossbar, Slopeline and the Centerline.

Each of the three basic systems, the Navy said, "have highly desirable features for low-visibility approaches, but alone each leaves something to be desired for all-weather-condition and all-aircraft-type operation."

"The slopeline is the best possible for maintaining proper glide path. The six-light angled 'bars' set at 45 degrees from the ground and perpendicular to the centerline. When an airplane is above the glide path the bar lights angle inboard or below the line. If the airplane is below the glide path the lines appear broken. On glide path, the bars appear as a straight line funneling the plane on to the runway.

"At 500 foot intervals along the approach line, a partial or complete crossbar of lights cuts across the slopeline and centerline lights. One thousand feet from the end of the runway there is a solid cross-line of red lights. Just as the pilot approaches the end of the approach system, he sees two bars of green lights extending outboard of the lines of approach lights, marking the runway end. The crossbar is an excellent roll reference and will provide a visual horizon for the pilot.

"The centerline provides a check for giving drift indication and keeping the aircraft squarely on the centerline of the runway.

"The composite lighting layout is 3,000 feet long. As the pilot approaches the end of the runway, he can tell by the light pattern formed and the color of the lights what his exact position is in regard to the glide path.

"Brightness of the lights can be varied to conform with visibility conditions from the control tower. The pilot tells the tower on final how the lights are: too high or too low and the controller dials a five-position rheostat to the proper light intensity."

The award, consisting of a certificate and a suitably inscribed gold trophy, is presented each year to the person who contributes most to the advancement of the field of aviation medicine. Captain Kellum, past president of the Association, was selected for the award for his many contributions over the past 22 years.

He first became interested in the problems associated with aviation medicine in 1931 while under instructions at the Naval Medical School, then located at 23d and E Streets, N.W., Washington, D. C. Upon completion of this course of instruction he was designated a Naval Flight Surgeon and participated in early research on the psychological problems associated with the selection of candidates for flight training.

Later he made extensive studies of the problem of anoxia (the condition suffered by aviators when flying at altitudes where oxygen is insufficient to permit normal breathing) and during the period 1935-37, while aboard the USS Saratoga he helped in the development of an early type oxygen mask. During the period 1942-45 he served as the Assistant to the Director, Aviation Medicine Division, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and during these three years was responsible for the development of improved oxygen breathing equipment.

The Navy Supply Plan was developed to obtain a greater degree of centralized control and to standardize the procedures of operation within the Navy Supply System.

AF 'Copter Program Hit

By Cut In Appropriations

A top Air Force official has said he fears the reduced Air Force budget "may adversely affect the expanding Air Force utilization of the helicopter."

This was the statement made by Under Secretary James H. Douglas in an address at Washington, D. C., on 16 May to the Honors Night dinner of the American Helicopter Society.

Mr. Douglas noted that there is a Helicopter Force in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, as well as in the Air Force, and said that "currently the Army promises to provide the largest of the Service helicopter forces."

Although forecasting a cut in the Air Force helicopter program as a result of the "interim program" of an Air Force of 120 groups, instead of 143 groups, Under Secretary Douglas told of plans the Air Force has for greater utilization of helicopters.

He said the Air Force is interested in development of assault helicopter squadrons for airborne operations.

"An assault helicopter," said Mr. Douglas, "makes the standard infantry division air transportable to a forward airhead without prepared airstrips, and at the same time, provides transportation for casualties back to fixed medical installations. Further, the assault helicopter will insure delivery of adequate supplies, equipment and personnel into the airhead for the build-up phase and preparations of the airstrips for the fixed wing transports."

In addition to the assault squadrons, Mr. Douglas related that the Air Force plans to utilize liaison helicopter squadrons equipped with smaller 'copters to perform local rescue functions in areas not covered by the Air Rescue Service. The liaison squadrons, he said, would support remotely located installations and would provide an extension of the medical evacuation capability.

The Air Force Under Secretary told the Helicopter Society that helicopters of the 3d Air Rescue Group in Korea have picked up about 800 U. N. men behind enemy lines and have evacuated 6400 others from the front lines.

TAC Safety Program

A safety program to conserve manpower and reduce costs arising from automobile accidents has been launched by the Tactical Air Command to run through 13 Sept.

TAC suffered 57 deaths and 1,206 disabling injuries because of ground accidents during 1952, General John K. Cannon, TAC commander, said. Of these casualties, which resulted in an economic loss of approximately $2,800,000, 60 per cent were caused by military and privately-owned vehicles.

"The period for 'Operation Impact' was selected for several reasons," General Cannon stated. "Three weekends which have the greatest number of serious accidents are included . . . Memorial Day, Fourth of July and Labor Day. In addition, past experience has shown us that the summer months are our peak fatality period, due to increased travel during vacation time."

"We hope that by focusing attention of all drivers in TAC on the hazards facing them, that the accident rate can be materially reduced. Each base will undertake a program of education and indoctrination of its vehicle operators which will continue throughout the period. At the end of the campaign, we believe that we will be able to show a tangible improvement."

C-124 Lands on Ice Island

A Tactical Air Command Douglas C-124 troop carrier has landed a 16,000-pound bulldozer on the runway of T-3, the floating ice island near the North Pole, it was announced by General John K. Cannon, TAC commander.

It marked the first time that the largest troop carrier in the Air Force landed and took off from the tiny island.

Piloted by Maj. Henry J. Wurster, with a crew of ten, the aircraft had a loading weight of 160,000 pounds when it touched down on the icy runway. The bulldozer was immediately put into operation, clearing the runway of snowdrifts so that it could be kept in constant use to facilitate the landings of lighter aircraft assigned to Northeast Air Command, which supplies T-3.

Indef. Term Appointments

Assistant Defense Secretary John A. Hannah this week issued a directive pertaining to the conversion of Reserve Officer definite term appointments to indefinite term appointments.

Dr. Hannah said that the directive is designed to insure the greatest practicable degree of uniformity implementing the Armed Forces Reserve Act of 1952.

The directive states:

"Reserve officers whose current appointments expire subsequent to 1 April 1953, except those who have already converted their appointments or are subjects of unfavorable investigative action, shall within the 120-day period preceding expiration of their current five-year appointments, receive a notice of their opportunity to accept an indefinite term appointment. This notice, like those already given, may include a 60-day acceptance proviso."

The directive is applicable to the Army and Air Force.

Minn. Guard Instructor

Col. Bruce D. Biddlecome has been appointed Senior Air Instructor at Holman Field, Minn.

During WW II, he served with the 324th Fighter Group in Africa, Italy and Southern France and later with the Far East Air Forces. His last assignment was Commanding Officer of the 1100th AB Group, Bolling AFB.

Commands Goodfellow AFB

Col. Robert B. Davenport will become commanding officer of Goodfellow AFB, San Angelo, Tex., to succeed Col. John R. Morgan, who will retire 31 July after more than 35 years in the Service. Colonel Morgan has been commanding officer of Goodfellow since 29 July 1950.

No date has been set for Colonel Davenport to assume his new duties. He has been chief of operations at FlyTAF Headquarters, and has spent most of his 25 years in the Service training pilots to fly.

Aviation Writers Learn Stratojet Exploits, Hear Story of Record B-47 Non-Stop Flight

The Air Force this week revealed at the Aviation Writers Association convention in Dallas, Tex., that an all-time distance and endurance record was set last year by a Boeing B-47 stratojet bomber which flew 12,000 miles non-stop in 24 hours.

The record flight was made by a test crew from Edwards AFB, Calif., over the southern and western parts of the United States. The big, 6-jet, 185,000 pound B-47 was refueled three times during the 24 hour flight by tanker aircraft. A dummy 10,000-pound bomb was dropped half way in flight to stimulate a long-range strategic mission. Crew members were Lt. Col. Russell E. Schleeh, Capt. Leonard P. Farrell, M/Sgt. Chester E. Lee, and Robert A. Jackson, civilian project engineer.

A veteran stratojet test pilot, Colonel Schleeh was aircraft commander of an early experimental Boeing XB-47 which in 1948 set a new unofficial transcontinental speed record of 3 hours, 26 minutes on a flight from Moses Lake, Wash., to Andrews AFB, Md., at an average speed of 607 miles per hour.

The Air Force also disclosed at the A.N.A. sessions that a B-47 stratojet had made the first jet flight over the North Pole. The flight was made more than a year ago, marking the first crossing of the polar region by jet.

After takeoff from Eielson AFB, near Fairbanks, the swept-wing bomber headed over the Arctic ocean towards the Pole, circled the top of the world, then turned back towards Alaska.

Pilot for the historic flight was Col. Richard C. Neeley. Co-pilot was Col. J. G. Foster; radar operator-navigator was Capt. D. J. Haney.

Both flights were of a test flight nature since the planes used were not of a combat configuration, the Air Force said.

Several wings of the USAF's Strategic Air Command are now conducting operational training with stratojets, and other medium bombardment units are to be converted to the jet bombers in coming months.

The B-47 compares in size to the B-29 Superfort. It is in the 600-mile-per-hour class and has a combat radius without refueling of more than 1,500 miles.

In a report to the aviation writers, the Air Force said the 306th Medium Bombardment Wing based at MacDill AFB, Tampa, Fla., the first Strategic Air Command unit to be equipped with B-47's, earlier this year completed an exhaustive exercise designed to test the capabilities of the B-47 under simulated combat conditions. The tests were described as "completely satisfactory."

Last month, two B-47's of the 306th Wing made a pioneering, non-stop flight across the Atlantic.

The stratojets took off from Limestone, Maine, before dawn on 7 April and arrived at Fairford, England, 5 hours and 38 minutes later, spanning the 3,120 miles at an average speed of 555 miles per hour. In-flight refueling was not used for the Atlantic crossing.

The lead ship crew on the flight consisted of Col. Michael N. W. McCoy, Commander of the 306th Bomb Wing; Lt. Col. George P. Birdsong, Jr., co-pilot; and Lt. Col. Michael I. Berkowitz, observer. In the second plane were Lt. Col. Benjamin B. Klose, pilot; Lt. Col. Lloyd D. Griffin, co-pilot; and Lt. Col. Lawrence H. Grant, observer.

The Boeing B-47 is now in quantity production for the Air Force at Boeing's Wichita, Kansas, plant; at Lockheed's Marietta, Georgia, plant; and at Douglas's Tulsa, Oklahoma, plant.

As more B-47's are integrated into operational units, the jet bombers will become the mainstay of the Strategic Air Command.

The stratojet, which can carry the atomic bomb faster and higher than any other strategic bomber in its class, will fill the immediate requirement for an air striking force compatible with the times, adapted to greater speeds and higher altitudes.

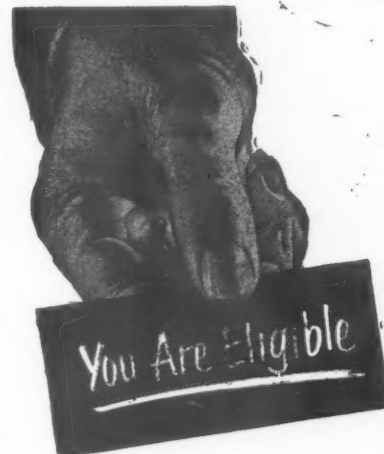

As a speedy bomber with intermediate range, the B-47 complements the long-range heavy bombers now available, and gives the Strategic Air Command the ability to strike swiftly and repeatedly from many bases at target systems of great magnitude.

15-Ton 'Cat Goes Aloft

A giant D-7 Caterpillar tractor weighing almost 15 tons has been flown from Westover AFB, Mass., to Thule AB, Greenland.

The tractor, the heaviest single item ever flown out of Westover, weighed 774 pounds more than the cab assembly for a tractor-mounted power crane which was flown to Thule in 1951. It was loaded aboard a C-124 Globemaster. With the exception of the dozer blade, which was removed to lighten the load, the tractor was flown in a single piece.

The tractor was driven up the ramp leading to the belly of the Globemaster under its own power, although it was augmented by a Coleman tractor and a 3/4-inch steel winding cable. The entire loading operation took only an hour. The D-7 will be used at Thule on a joint Army-Navy-Air Force project, it was stated.

"The blunt, sober truth is that we cannot afford to relax our defenses until we have seen clear, unmistakable evidence of genuinely peaceful purpose on the part of the Soviet Union."—PRESIDENT EISENHOWER.

Pay Raise Precedent. A precedent for support by the Bureau of the Budget of Representative Van Zandt's bill to give military personnel a cost-of-living pay adjustment was established this week. Budget Director Joseph M. Dodge, in a letter to the Senate District Committee, which acts on matters relating to the District of Columbia, stated that policemen and firemen are justified a pay raise up to 8 per cent to cover increases in the cost-of-living. The last increase voted for the hard-working police officers and firemen of the Nation's Capital whose ranks are understaffed was approved in P.L. 207, dated 25 Oct. 1951. This provided for a 10 per cent pay boost, with a minimum of $300 and a maximum of $800.

By comparison, the last cost-of-living pay increase for military personnel was voted in an Act of 19 May 1952 amending the Career Compensation Act of 1949. This resulted in a pay increase averaging 5 per cent, or just about one-half the amount voted by Congress for Federal and District employees, including the policemen and firemen.

Significantly, the 8 per cent ceiling which Budget Director Dodge places on the raise now being considered for the policemen and firemen is exactly the percentage pay increase which former Defense Secretary Robert A. Lovett said, on the day before leaving office, should be voted for the men and women in the Uniformed Services.

In view of the eminent role which Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson played in developing industrial wage contracts linking pay to cost-of-living, and now with disclosure of official Bureau of the Budget endorsement for a pay raise up to 8 per cent for District policemen and firemen, military personnel can hope that they will be accorded comparable and equitable consideration.

"Money Men" and NCO's. The all-Service campaign to boost career opportunities and prestige of non-commissioned officers has gained vital support on Capitol Hill. Apparently, forthcoming defense economy is not to be achieved at the expense of the NCO's, as was the foolish case last year.

During current closed-session hearings on the revised defense budget with its stress on economy decisions, House Appropriations Subcommittee members have demanded assurance that reduced expenditures will not reduce NCO promotions. The Committee earlier this year demonstrated its unequivocal attitude on this subject when it endorsed supplemental funds requests which included money for a more attractive enlisted grade spread structure. Concern was expressed over Budget Bureau action last year which resulted in delayed NCO promotions.

In their consideration of Pentagon budget estimates for fiscal '54, the "money men" of the Appropriations Subcommittees on defense have been told that while the reduction in over-all manpower strength obviously will mean numerically fewer NCO promotions, plans for the new fiscal year call for relatively more men in higher enlisted grades.

As the Armed Forces are reduced in strength, the problem of retaining skilled NCO's, long recognized as the backbone of an effective fighting force, will become increasingly important. The Air Force, for example, is known to be seriously disturbed over a prospective shortage of airmen mechanics and technicians—with long lead-time training requirements—about a year from now as a result of the proposed reduction in airmen input. This makes all the more essential the need to hold the Non-Coms in Service. The NCO problem which confronts the Air Force also disturbs the Army, Navy and Marine Corps. All are doing everything possible to obtain a high reenlistment rate among Non-Coms and Petty Officers. The realization of Appropriations Committee members that it would be false economy to draw the purse strings on adequate promotion prospects for NCO's is heartening.

READERS' VIEWS

(Letters to the Editor must have author's name and address, but name will be omitted on publication if writer so states. Longer letters may be extracted for publication.)

Why Secret?

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

All matters pertaining to officers, regardless of the subject at hand, should be bared to the officer concerned.

I am referring to actions, findings and recommendations of the promotion selection board appointed to screen the records of officers within the field of consideration for promotion.

These findings and recommendations are arrived at in closed session and never revealed, even to the officer concerned, if the officer is not recommended for advancement.

One question comes to my mind at this time.

How is an officer expected to correct his faults if he is not informed of their nature and degree?

CAPTAIN, INFANTRY,
(TWO-TIME LOSER, 51-53)

The Journal Apologizes

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

I would like to call attention to an error in your usually reliable reporting—as contained in the last issue of THE JOURNAL. You will note under the picture on page 1088 of the last issue a statement that Lt. Gen. Charles P. Cabell, USAF, is the "first military man to be Deputy Director of CIA."

In view of the fact that I was Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, and its predecessor the Central Intelligence Group, for a period of three years (1946-1949), I am certain that you will want to correct your error and keep the record straight.

E. K. WRIGHT,
Maj. General, USA.

Reserve Promotions

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

It seems to me that the proposed plan of promotion for the Reserves leaves much to be desired—in fact, there exists an actual penalty for active participation in the Reserve program in certain instances. The officer who has an assignment is now under a handicap unless there happens to exist an appropriate vacancy in the unit to which he is assigned. Oh sure, he can request relief and go into the "pool," but then he loses his "drill pay" with no absolute assurance of selection for promotion.

What is wrong with the idea of considering all officers for promotion, regardless of assignment or non-assignment, then if and when promoted, the officer holding a T/O assignment can be simultaneously relieved from his unit, if no appropriate vacancy in the advanced grade exists.

This proposal of mine would serve also to permit all Lt. Colonels who are selected and placed on a "promotion list" to continue to hold their present T/O assignments until promoted or until they become 58 years of age, whichever is the earlier.

I feel my plan is fair and equitable

It remains to be seen whether this enlightened approach will be continued and whether it will be extended to the many other factors relating to military morale—and hence to the attractiveness of a career in the Uniformed Services.

IN THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago—

In the Battle of Bismarck Sea, in which planes of the Southwest Command totally destroyed a convoy of Japanese transports and destroyers and 15,000 Jap soldiers, the destructive action was made possible by a coordinated aerial attack with mast height bombing. "In the coordinated attack, P-38's attack first, engaging the enemy's cover of Zeros. These are followed by a wave of heavy bombers at medium altitude to divert the antiaircraft fire and achieve hits. Next British Beaufighters strafed the enemy fore and aft to put down his gunners. Behind them came the B-25's, medium bombers, firing their eight forward guns and dropping bombs. A wave of A-20's follow up. No torpedos were used, only aerial bombs."

50 Years Ago—

Now that the permanent treaty between the United States and Cuba has been signed by the representatives of both governments, the relations between the two countries have reached a solid and definite basis. The treaty simply gives the force of law to the Platt amendment to the Cuban constitution, whereby Cuba pledges herself never to enter into any treaty or other compact with any other power which will impair or tend to impair her independence. The treaty stipulates that the United States may intervene to preserve the independence of Cuba.

85 Years Ago—

A majority of the House Committee on Appropriations have reported in favor of paying for Alaska, a minority in favor of rescinding the bargain. If the Senate, after an elaborate discussion and examination of this absolutely non-partisan question cannot come to a proper conclusion about it, who can? The Russian flag has been hauled down, and our own run up at New Archangel. The Russian troops have been sent back to St. Petersburg, and our own sent forward from San Francisco. The whole business of transfer has been formally concluded. It would be ridiculous, and expose us to well-deserved contempt as a nation to "go back" upon the bargain for a petty ten millions.

—it places a hardship on no one—and it does give the officer for whom there is no T/O vacancy locally available, a chance for selection on the Army-wide basis without requiring him to lose his presently held financial benefits on the gamble that he may be one of the fortunates.

By the way, am I wrong in my understanding that the Army not so long ago was holding out to us the proposition that in return for an active interest and participation, we could serve until 60 years of age. Now, it seems we are too old to serve (I'll be 57 in July) but not old enough to benefit under Title III, PL 850. What kind of logic is this?

The Colonel's Letter

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The letter from the colonel in your 16 May issue in which he says "loyalty should go down as well as up," really lays it on the line and it's good to hear that his comments are being studied by people who can do something about the situation.

On the brighter side, it now looks to some of us in the field as if the folks in Washington are genuinely going to make an effort to correct the situation. The time has come for officials with authority to put an end to what the colonel correctly calls a trend toward "degradation of regular military service."

Chief Executive Tells Midshipmen "There Is Something Special" About Lifetime of Service In Uniform Forces; Grants Presidential Amnesty.

(President Outlines Defense Plans, P. 1165)

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER and Vice Adm. C. Turner Joy, USNA Superintendent, confer with top Midshipmen during the Chief Executive's visit to Annapolis.

PRESIDENT Eisenhower told the U. S. Naval Academy midshipmen this week that "there is something special about dedicating your lives to the United States of America."

In his first visit to the Naval Academy since he was sworn into office, the President made an informal address to the midshipmen during their noon meal last Sunday.

Recalling his many years of association with "service brats," the President said he had "never heard one of them say, 'Oh my father was just a captain in the Navy or a colonel in the Marines, or in the other services.' He has pushed out his chest and he has said it proudly, far more proudly, it has struck me, than has the man who has said 'my father is a merchant.'"

He noted that the latter calling is "a very honorable" and "a very necessary" one, but "there is something special about dedicating your lives to the United States of America that lives with you and what is more important in my opinion, with your children as long as they shall live."

The President's remarks were in keeping with his recently expressed hope that the Services can be made more attractive for those who enter military fields in search of a life-time career. A study is now being completed in the Defense Department on this subject.

Following his arrival at the Naval Academy, the President granted amnesty to violators of minor regulations.

In the Academy Chapel, where the President attended the Sunday services, he heard a sermon by guest Chaplain Frank E. Pulley, pastor of the cadet chapel at West Point.

Greeted by Adm. Joy

The President and his party arrived at the Academy aboard the Presidential Yacht Williamsburg and were greeted at Santee Pier by the Academy Superintendent, Vice Adm. C. Turner Joy. Admiral Joy, accompanied by Capt. Charles A. Buchanan, Commandant of Midshipmen, boarded the yacht with his aides, Capt. R. T. S. Keith, Capt. H. G. Corey, Comdr. G. W. Rahill and Lt. R. S. Wentworth, to welcome the President.

Later, they proceeded by automobile to the Academy Chapel to watch the Brigade of Midshipmen march by, and to attend the Sunday services. At the conclusion of the services, the official party again took up positions on the Chapel steps where a group of 11 senior midshipmen officers were presented to President Eisenhower.

Presented to President

This group consisted of Midshipman Captain Carlisle A. H. Trost, Commander of the Brigade; Midshipman Comdr. William Hervey Snouse, Commander of the First Regiment; Midshipman Lt. Comdr. Bernard Charles Botula, Brigade Operations Officer; Midshipman Lt. Comdr. Melvin LeRoy Hiller, Operations Officer of the First Regiment; Midshipman Lt. Comdr. Kent Wayne Curl, Operations Officer of the Second Regiment; and the six battalion commanders: Midshipman Lieutenant Commanders Henry Ross Perot, Joseph Railton Morgan, Harold Glen Hatch, Billy Gene Starnes, Malcolm Randolph Corbin, jr., and Vaughn Edgar Wilson, jr.

"March Past" Order

The President and his party then walked to the Superintendent's Quarters where heads of Naval Academy Departments and commanding officers of Severn River Naval Command activities, and their ladies, were presented. At noon, the party took up positions on the front steps of Bancroft Hall to observe the noon meal formation, and the President received the traditional "March Past."

Shortly thereafter, President Eisenhower appeared in the Mess Hall and made his brief, off-the-cuff remarks to the Midshipmen. He was introduced by Midshipman Trost.

Members of Party

The Presidential party assembled aboard the Williamsburg for a small, informal luncheon before sailing for Washington. President Eisenhower was accompanied by Mrs. Eisenhower, Mrs. John S. Doud, (Mrs. Eisenhower's mother); Col. and Mrs. George G. Moore, (sister and brother-in-law of Mrs. Eisenhower); Mr. Thomas Stephens, Appointment Secretary; Mr. James C. Hagerty, Presidential Secretary; Comdr. Edward L. Beach, USN, Naval Aide to the President; Mr. C. D. Jackson and Dr. Gabriel Hauge, Administrative Assistants. Joining the group at Annapolis were Doctor and Mrs. Milton Eisenhower (the President's brother and sister-in-law).

Gen. Ridgway's Testimony Aids NATO

BY calm and measured recital of Europe's military facts, plus a few impressive conclusions, General Matthew B. Ridgway, in his testimony before congressional committees, this week provided solid support for President Eisenhower's European-aid program. It is much too early to predict what Congressional action on the Mutual Security program will be, but it is not too early to state that the full program was immeasurably aided by the substance and the manner alike of General Ridgway's observations.

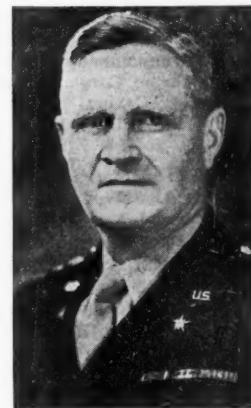

A great deal of harm to the aid-for-Europe planning had been done on both sides of the Atlantic in preceding days. The Churchill suggestions, for all the solid merit they contained, were badly received in the United States and items of the Prime Minister's remarks were singled out for unreasoning criticism. Mr. Attlee's speech suffered still more at the hands of fierce critics who ignored most of the former Prime Minister's argument and dealt only with a few of his much less fortunate observations. One sobering result was to bring from a U. S. Senator the indignant suggestion that in world affairs America might hereafter do better to "go it alone," and General Ridgway was asked for an estimate of the effect this would have.

THE VISITOR FROM SHAPE did not soften his reply. "My opinion, sir, is that adoption of that course of action would be to invite inevitable national disaster" he said. "I think it is absolutely essential to our security that we have allies."

It was interesting to see that this calm but unmistakable disagreement with the explosive utterances of preceding days closed the case, so far as the Supreme Allied Commander was concerned, and paved the way for some plain-spoken remarks on the main issue—the way in which the defense of the west is to be furthered. With the skill of a veteran staff officer, General Ridgway restated his recommendations for continued aid on a large scale, without being snared into criticism either of current official economy aims or of measures (such as the reduced Air Force budget) designed to save money.

"To the extent that such a reduction resulted in withholding of air potential which I have recommended, I would deplore it; I don't know whether it would have such a result or not," he said. And, later, when the propriety of "differing" with civilian authorities seemed to be raised, he said of himself and his staff "We do not believe the civil authorities for one moment would want us to change our professional military judgment (as to needs) because somebody says it costs too much money."

THE INTEGRITY of his testimony thus made clear, General Ridgway spoke with complete candor and simplicity of the basic facts—that even attainment of the provisional 1954 readiness goals will leave the Treaty nations "short of minimum defensive strength required to prevent serious reverses in the early stages of a determined attack"; that "air power is still the weakest link"; that present NATO goals are "a very reasonable minimum and any reduction whatever in those goals would be an unwise step." He gave full support to the statement of his deputy, General Thomas T. Handy, USA, that allies who provide both manpower and industrial capacity must be enabled to use them to the benefit of the whole alliance. General Handy's detailed report of aid to date stated that, as of March 31, deliveries of our scheduled aid are as follows: for land forces we have delivered 38 per cent of the scheduled $6.5 billions, for sea forces 18 per cent of $1.8 billions, for air forces 19 per cent of $4.1 billions.

GEN. HANDY

WHILE WEST GERMANY will not be included in any Big Four conference which may one day follow the Churchill suggestions, Chancellor Adenauer gives assurance to his people that West Germany will surely be consulted in advance. But in default of any such meeting, and of the other nations' support of the European Defense Community plan (which Herr Adenauer last week at length pushed through the upper house, whereby Bonn leads that particular procession) West Germany is giving consideration to a modest interim step in rearmament. This is a proposal from Robert Lehr, Interior Minister, to develop the present lightly armed 10,000-man border police into an establishment of 50,000 with mortars and a few armored cars and planes, to make its border patrols somewhat more effective. As an interim plan this is a feeble substitute for the projected 12-division West German component of a European Army.

THE PHILIPPINES LIBERAL party assembles tomorrow to name its candidate to succeed President Quirino. The President's own candidate for the nomination is himself, and indication is that he will put up a powerful opposition to General Carlos P. Romulo (formerly ambassador to America). The party nomination is by no means a guarantee of election, for in the later nationwide poll Ramon Magsaysay continues to provide formidable competition.

INDO-CHINA this week received General Henri-Eugene Navarre as the new commander of French Union forces, to replace General Raoul Salan; at the same time General Henri Lauzin is replacing General Lionel Chassin as French Air Force commander in the Far East. There is no certainty that a more aggressive operation can be undertaken soon; Salan's judgment was that his forces were insufficient, and Navarre's survey may lead him to the same view. The Vietminh offensive in Laos has apparently failed for the lack of support, but the French Union's opportunity to hurt the Reds badly while they were overextended seems now to be gone.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Shift Top Marine Generals—An impending shift of Marine Corps general officers may see at least three top-ranking Marines placed on the retired list—one of whom is expected to be named to an important new post by the President—and several others transferred to new assignments.

Although no confirmation could be obtained from Marine Corps Headquarters, authoritative sources informed THE JOURNAL that:

1—Lt. Gen. Graves B. Erskine, Lt. Gen. Clifton B. Cates and Maj. Gen. Field Harris will be retired.

2—General Erskine will be appointed by President Eisenhower to head a powerful new psychological warfare program for the United States. (The Marine Corps said this week that General Erskine has been ordered relieved as Commanding General of Fleet Marine Forces, Atlantic, by Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Smith, now Commanding General of the Marine Barracks at Camp Pendleton, Calif.)

Lt. Gen. Erskine

3—General Harris will be succeeded as Commanding General, Air, Fleet Marine Force, Atlantic, by Maj. Gen. Clayton C. Jerome, now commanding the Second Marine Air Wing at Cherry Point, N. C.

4—General Smith will be promoted to three-star rank.

5—Maj. Gen. Merrill B. Twining, now confined to the Naval Hospital at Bethesda, Md., will be ordered to Headquarters, Marine Corps, in the near future.

Plans for the retirement of Generals Erskine and Harris are fairly well substantiated, observers say, but they are less certain about the retirement of General Cates, who is Commandant of the Marine Corps Schools at Quantico, Va.

General Cates is known to have desired retirement at the time he stepped down as Commandant of the Marine Corps, but the Van Zandt amendment (which placed a curb on all retirements except those for physical disability, statutory age, hardship and "best interests of the service") presented a barrier which made it necessary for him to remain on active duty in a lesser billet. This amendment will die with the current fiscal year budget, however, unless replaced with a similar measure before the end of next month, and the way will be open for General Cates to retire.

Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Pollock, who has been ordered home from Korea where he commands the First Marine Division, has been given a new assignment at Quantico. Although his new duty was not announced, observers noted that there are only two jobs at Quantico to which he could be assigned: Commandant of the Marine Corps Schools or Director of the Marine Corps Educational Center. Indications are that he will be given the latter billet.

In announcing the shift of General Smith to Norfolk, the Marine Corps said Maj. Gen. Robert H. Pepper, Commanding General of the 3d Marine Division at Camp Pendleton will take over General Smith's post on an "additional duty" basis.

Lt. Gen. Cates

Wave Promotions Opening Up—In her final press conference as Director of the Waves, Capt. Joy Bright Hancock, USN, this week expressed keen satisfaction with the current Wave program. She also indicated that promotion and assignment opportunities for women in the Navy will be looking up in the future.

Captain Hancock retires on 1 June as Assistant Chief of Naval Personnel for Women. She will be succeeded by Comdr. Louise K. Wilde, who will be promoted to the rank of captain.

The Wave Director said the Navy currently has more than 8,000 women on active duty, both Regulars and Reserves. This figure, she said, includes 954 officers and 7,242 enlisted women. "About three per cent" of the Waves are now serving overseas, she added.

Questioned about promotion opportunities for the Waves, Captain Hancock said that when the Wave program was first set up it was anticipated that it would take "about 10 years" for the promotion policies to be brought to full fruition. She indicated that advances are now being made in this direction, and that quotas for commanders and lieutenant commanders will be increased as more women are taken into the Regular ranks of the Waves.

She said also that studies are being conducted to see how more Navy women can be fitted into the technological fields, thus creating new assignment opportunities. She noted that the Waves go through the same schools that the Navy maintains for male personnel and compete with them on an equal basis. "And, by golly, they're doing all right," she added.

Captain Hancock said she expects to "loaf" for at least several months following her retirement, and that during that period she hopes to do some fiction writing. Asked if the Navy would figure in her stories, she quipped that she didn't see how anything she wrote could help but have "something of the sea flavor in it."

B-36 Declared Far From Obsolete—The giant Air Force B-36 "is and will remain for years the principal striking weapon of the Strategic Air Command," according to August C. Esenwein, an official of the Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corporation.

At a meeting of the Aviation Writers Association this week in Fort Worth, Tex., Mr. Esenwein said some people have tagged the B-36 "obsolescent" and "obsolete." He declared that the Air Force "well knows and Convair well knows that such references are rushing the season a bit."

He said "Such terms as 'obsolescent' imply that there is something better in being to take the B-36's place. The truth of the matter is the B-36 will be the only long-range operational bomber available to the Air Force in useful quantities for several years to come."

In emphasizing that the B-36 is "far from" obsolete Mr. Esenwein noted, moreover, that when the plane "has served its usefulness as a first line bombardment

..Military personnel are hopeful the Defense Dept. will disclose as QUICKLY AS POSSIBLE identity of installations to be shut down in the current economy program. Speedy announcement of such action would help reduce INEVITABLE HARDSHIPS, such as ill-timed home purchases. There's no doubt, however, that the forthcoming deactivations will result in FINANCIAL LOSSES for many officers and enlisted men.

...One major reason for likely delays in designation of facilities to be closed is the necessity for politic CAPITOL HILL COORDINATION. Pentagon PubInfo officers cannot put out information until ADVANCE NOTIFICATION is given to Members of Congress, who all want economy but in somebody else's district.

...There is speculation at the Pentagon that the ABBREVIATED TOURS for the newly named JCS members may be extended to other military appointive posts. The reasoning goes that if the Chiefs are to serve only TWO YEAR TERMS, subordinate officials, such as heads of technical services may be denied the superior tenure of four-year appointments.

...The new inquiry into RESERVE AFFAIRS promised by the House Armed Services Committee likely will probe the reasons for the continued delay in implementation of the CONTRACT TOUR provisions of the Armed Forces Reserve Act. Congress said Reserves should be given maximum guarantees of FIVE YEARS active service, with severance pay in event of premature relief from duty. The Bureau of the Budget has held out for a TWO YEAR contract, possibly would agree to three years as a compromise. Thus far, Defense Dept. has been firm, insisting that highly qualified Reservists should have the five years Congress intended.

...The Reserve Officers Association is gaining support in Congress for its proposal to have an ASSISTANT DEFENSE SECRETARY for the Reserve Forces. The ROA hopes one of the six proposed new Asst. SecDepts. will be given the post. Responsibility for such matters now is under Asst. SecDef. John A. Hannah. His job would be of DIMINISHED IMPORTANCE if National Guard and Reserve manpower problems were placed under another official.

...When Adm. Radford is called to testify before the Senate Armed Services Committee on his nomination to be JCS CHAIRMAN, members may ask his views about a UNIFIED INTELLIGENCE organization under the JCS. The Committee heard from Army Chief of Staff Gen. J. Lawton Collins that he had made such a recommendation to the Rockefeller Commission. In the past, the Navy has had considerably LESS ENTHUSIASM for a unified G-2 setup than the Army.

and reconnaissance airplane, it will continue to be a formidable element in national defense because of its adaptability to other missions such as aerial refueling."

Mr. Esenwein, who is Manager of the Fort Worth Division of Convair, also spoke of air weapons of the future. Touching on the design study for a new supersonic bomber which Convair is making for the Air Force, he noted that although none of the details regarding the plane have been released "it is a big step forward." He said "It had to be for the simple and undeniable reason that the Soviet Union has been getting stronger faster than we have."

The Convair official said some people "have a mistaken notion that we are gaining on the Soviets" because we "are building more airplanes today than we built last year, and that our atomic stockpile is bigger now than it was 12 months ago." He said, however, that these achievements are significant only when "placed alongside the achievements of the Soviet."

He said the Soviet Union is improving its means of delivering atomic bombs "both by air and by submarine faster than we are improving our means of intercepting them." Mr. Esenwein warned that "our own retaliatory strategic striking force is being hard put to keep pace with the Soviet's capacity to intercept it."

AF Prepares 'Impact' Data On Personnel Cutback

Air Force officials said this week it was still too early to make known the detailed personnel ramifications of the revised Air Force buildup program. Most queries were answered by "no comment at this time."

It is obvious, however, without official elaboration, that the reduced strength objectives of the Air Force will mean fewer promotions during fiscal '54, for officers and airmen alike.

A board which was to have met to name airmen for appointment as warrant officers did not convene on schedule. Immediately, it was speculated that this was a result of the revised budget.

Air Force officials do say that the officer promotion increment scheduled for 8 June will not be affected by the personnel cut-back. They report that these promotions will be made on schedule, as will the advancement of the remaining few officers on the eligibility lists early in fiscal '54.

It is probable that in the next weeks, the Air Force will release details concerning modifications in the recall program, direct appointments, Officer Candidate School, promotion quotas, enlistment quotas, etc.

Already, it has been disclosed that enlistment quotas for May and June have been cut by at least 50 per cent.

It will remain to be seen whether the Air Force will be permitted to tell the full story of the cutback impact, or whether Pentagon officials will "classify" some of this information.

That the Air Force is preparing the complete story is known; whether it will be made public in the near future remains to be seen.

Safety Gadgets Help

Lt. Gen. James H. Doolittle, World War II commander of the Eighth Air Force, and the leader of the first air raid against Tokyo, defends plane "gadgets" this week in an article in Collier's.

Answering reported complaints by some Air Force pilots that their planes were hampered in Korea by excessive equipment, General Doolittle asserts that the arsenal of modern aircraft devices played a significant part in our air victories in Korea.

He notes that U. S. aviators who held the air over Korea early in that war were battle-seasoned veterans of World War II, but that they gradually were replaced with youngsters "fresh out of flying school" who benefited greatly from the "gadgets." General Doolittle said, "In effect, we replaced combat experience with gadgets."

In the Collier's article, "Safety Gadgets—They're Helping Our Fighter Pilots," General Doolittle gives details about many of the new devices, and outlines graphically the manner in which some of them are employed.

Army Officer on Fleet Staff

Lt. Col. Rae A. Donaldson, QMC, USA, has reported for duty on the staff of Admiral Lynde D. McCormick, Commander in Chief, U. S. Atlantic Fleet.

He served in Pusan, Korea, and Camp Sendai, Japan, prior to reporting for duty in the Logistics section of the staff.

President Outlines Defense Plans, Says Program Has "Sense and Strength"

President Eisenhower this week outlined Administration plans for national defense in a nation-wide radio broadcast in which he declared that the revised military budget for fiscal 1954 places "major emphasis on air power."

The defense program, he said, may be lacking in "drama and sensation" but "it has sense and strength." He noted that the end objective is to provide defense forces "strong enough both to discourage aggression and beyond this to protect the Nation—in the event of any aggression—as it moves swiftly to full mobilization."

U. S. Could Win

The President said he believes "firmly" that the United States "if forced to total mobilization today, could meet and win any military challenge." And he added that he thinks the Soviets realize this also.

In devising the defense program, the President said he gave it "careful, personal study and analysis," at the same time seeking advice from the most competent people he could find. He noted, "We first determined what is truly vital to our security. We next planned ways to eliminate every useless expenditure and duplication. And we finally decided upon the amount of money needed to meet this program."

He said, "Such an analysis rejects the extreme arguments of enthusiasts and of all groups of special pleaders both in and out of the military service."

Most Funds for Air

Pointing up the emphasis placed on aviation forces, the President noted that air power "daily becomes a more important factor in modern war."

The revised budget, he said, "will provide the Air Force with more than 40 per cent of all defense funds programmed for 1954. As of this June 30, the Air Force will have available a sum totaling more than 40 billion dollars."

"Buttressing this strength are those additional funds allocated to naval air power for 1954—totaling more than half of the Navy budget. This means that almost 60 cents out of every dollar to be available for national defense in the next year will be devoted to air power and air defense."

Excerpts from the President's speech follow:

Realm of Speculation

"It is military fact that there is no such thing as maximum security short of total mobilization of all our national resources. Such security would compel us to imitate the methods of the dictator. It would compel us to put every able-bodied young man in uniform—to regiment the worker, the farmer, the businessman—to allocate materials and to control prices and wages—in short, to devote our whole Nation to the grim purposes of the garrison state."

This—I firmly believe—is not the way to defend America.

It is also a fact that when we seek anything less than this vision of military perfection—total mobilization—we are debating in a realm of speculation—sometimes informed, more often uninformed.

Words like "essential" and "indispensable" and "absolute minimum" become the common coin of this realm—and they are spent with wild abandon. One military man will argue hotly for a given number of aircraft as the "absolute minimum." Another, even from the same military service, will answer just as passionately that less aircraft of a different kind is "imperative." And others will earnestly advocate the "indispensable" needs for ships or tanks or rockets or guided missiles or artillery—all totaled in numbers that are always called "minimum," all such views are argued with vigor and tenacity. But obviously all cannot be right.

No Magic Numbers

Now it is a fact—and this I most deeply believe—that it is foolish and dangerous for any of us to be hypnotized by magic numbers in this type of analysis. There is no given number of ships—no given number of divisions—no given number of air wings in the Air Force, Navy, and Marine Corps—no given number of billions of dollars—that will automatically guarantee security.

I have given to this phase of our national planning careful, personal study and analysis. I have, as you know, lived with it for many years. I have also sought, of course, advice from the most competent people I could find.

What Is Truly Vital

Let me tell you how we approached this analysis. We did not set any fixed sum of money to which our defense plans had to be fitted. We first determined what is truly vital to our security. We next planned ways to eliminate every useless expenditure and duplication. And we finally decided upon the amount of money needed to meet this program.

Such an analysis rejects the extreme arguments of enthusiasts and of all groups of special pleaders both in and out of the military services.

By this I do assure you: What has been so carefully, so painstakingly evolved is a sound program. It contemplates in each of the armed forces calculated risks which have been prudently reasoned. And it represents, in my judgment, what is best for our Nation's permanent security.

Only One Formula

There is, I believe, only one honest, workable formula. It is not magical, but it is the best that competent men can define. It is this: A defense strong enough both to discourage aggression and beyond this to protect the Nation—in the event of any aggression—as it moves swiftly to full mobilization.

The more swiftly and smoothly we can mobilize, the less our dependence upon standing armies, navies, and air forces.

The more vigorously we eliminate the non-essential, the more effectively we can concentrate on what is vital.

With all this in mind, we are putting major emphasis on air power, which daily becomes a more important factor in modern war. Our revised budget will provide the Air Force with more than 40 per cent of all defense funds programmed for 1954. As of this June 30, the Air Force will have available a sum totaling more than 40 billion dollars. Buttressing this strength are those additional funds allocated to naval air power for 1954—totaling more than half of the Navy budget. This means that almost 60 cents out of every dollar to be available for national defense in the next year will be devoted to air power and air defense.

Steady Air Growth

These investments in air power represent and will continue to represent the heaviest single annual outlay of our Government. It is my conviction that our developing program—under constant review and study—will result in a steady growth in the size and efficiency of the air defense, until we have attained an adequate level of security.

I repeat: This security cannot arbitrarily be defined as the simple equivalent of a specific number of aircraft or air wings. For example: Today three aircraft with modern weapons can practically duplicate the destructive power of all the 2700 planes we unleashed in the great breakout attack from the Normandy beachhead. Clearly every technological advance profoundly affects this problem of air power—including the development of missiles now in production. Similar advances in civil defense will help shape the nature and size of our air forces.

Planned Security

The plain truth is this: Security is planned, not blindly bought. It is the product of thought, and work, and our ability and readiness to bear our military burden for however long the threat to freedom persists.

The course we must set for ourselves is a difficult one. It must avoid, on the one hand, the indefinite continuance of a needlessly high rate of Federal spending in excess of Federal income at a time of heavy taxation. It must avoid, on the other hand, any penny-wise, pound-foolish policy that could, through lack of needed strength, cripple the cause of freedom everywhere.

This middle way may lack drama and sensation. But it has sense and strength—lasting strength.

It may not scream with shrill crisis and emergency. But it speaks with conviction and realism."

Defense Chiefs Queried

About Military Budget

The Senate Appropriations Committee this week called Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson and Deputy Secretary Roger M. Kyes to testify on the revised military budget.

Mr. Wilson outlined his plans for defense spending in a prepared statement which he had presented previously to the House, and which was reported in detail in THE JOURNAL on 16 May.

The two Defense officials were called upon by the Senate subcommittee to give more specific details about the budget cuts. They were questioned particularly about the slash in Air Force funds.

Not Building Big Machine

Secretary Wilson told the Senators that his plans call for an Air Force that will be able to "strike back" if the United States is attacked "but we are not building up a big military machine to attack somebody." Under further questioning, he assured the committee members that the nation would have an offensive air arm.

The Defense Secretary said he thinks "our people can take some comfort" from the fact that we now have more long-range bombers than Russia and that indications point to a concentration within the USSR on fighter planes and defensive craft.

Asked by Senator Margaret Chase Smith (R-Me.) if the revised figures were approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Mr. Wilson said they had not been approved or disapproved. He noted that the new Joint Chiefs, who will take office in less than three months, will review the program.

Planes "Within Reason"

Chairman Homer Ferguson (R-Mich.) inquired if any reduction was contemplated in plane manufacturing. He was told, "There is nothing in our current planning that cuts out new military planes we can get within reason." Deputy Secretary Kyes said, "transports, trainers, helicopters and some other types" will be cut back.

Secretary Wilson told the committee that the present Defense budget is his own recommendation, as approved by the National Security Council and President Eisenhower. He said retiring Air Force Chief of Staff General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, represented the Joint Chiefs at the NSC session which approved the budget and that the Air Chief had raised no objection.

Senator Edward J. Thye (R-Minn.) clashed with Mr. Kyes about the Air Force cuts. He told a reporter later that he never did get an answer to a question he posed as to whether the Defense leaders had arrived at a new formula whereby they could get planes cheaper. When told by Mr. Kyes that "A dollar doesn't fly," Senator Thye retorted, "No, but you can use it to purchase an airplane."

Secretary Wilson explained to the committee that the Air Force will get $11,700,000,000 in new appropriations under the revised budget, plus $28,500,000,000 in hold-over funds. He said this will permit the development of 120 combat wings—equipped for the most part with modern aircraft—by next June.

Army Library Deputy

Maj. Robert W. Severance, former director of the Baylor University library, has left Air Force active duty to accept a civilian position with the Department of Army in Washington, D. C., as Deputy Director of the Army Library in the Pentagon.

Major Severance has been information services officer at the Human Resources Research Center, Lackland AFB, Tex. Prior to that he was publications and library officer at the Center. He was director of the Baylor University library when called to active duty in his reserve rank in March 1951.

VI Corps Deputy C.O.

Col. James C. Short, former Chief of Staff of VI Corps, Camp Atterbury, Ind., has been assigned Deputy Corps Commander at Camp MacArthur, San Pedro, Calif.

CNO Leads Survivor Benefits Appeal

man Dewey Short (R-Mo) of the Armed Services Committee was made public. This letter—the text herewith—gives the Defense Department's position on the legislation.

It was noted that the Bureau of the Budget has not yet acted.

However, as reported by Rear Adm. Ira H. Nunn, USN, Judge Advocate General of the Navy, here is the Department of Defense comment on H.R. 2521.

"Honorable Dewey Short, Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, House of Representatives, Washington 25, D. C.

"My dear Mr. Chairman:

"Your request for comment on the bill H.R. 2521, 'To permit members of the Armed Forces to elect certain contingency options, and for other purposes,' has been assigned to this Department by the Secretary of Defense for the preparation of a report thereon expressing the views of the Department of Defense.

"The purpose of this bill is to establish a system whereby a retired member of the Armed Forces may elect to have his retired pay reduced in order that his widow or dependent children may receive after his death an annuity not to exceed one half of his retired pay. The reduction to be made in the retired pay of retired members making this election would be computed by the service concerned in each individual case by an actuarial equivalent method using as a basis appropriate actuarial tables selected by the Board of Actuaries designated in the bill and an interest rate of 2% per centum per year. The bill provides for a Board of Actuaries to be composed of the Government Actuary, the Chief Actuary of the Social Security Administration and an actuary to be nominated by the Society of Actuaries.

"The bill would also amend the following laws:

"(a) The Serviceman's Indemnity Act of 1951 so as to give coverage under the Act to members of the reserve components while engaged in active duty for training or inactive duty training for any period of time, and to persons in the National Guard when ordered to Federal active duty for training.

"(b) Section 4 of the Naval Aviation Personnel Act, 1940, as amended (34 U.S.C. 855c-1), section 1 of the Act of August 30, 1935, as amended (10 U.S.C. 456), and section 3 of the Act of June 20, 1949 (32 U.S.C. 160a), so as to afford disability and death benefits for members of the reserve components of the Armed Forces while performing authorized travel to and from active duty for training and inactive duty training if that travel is performed in a Government vehicle or aircraft.

"(c) Section 402 of the Career Compensation Act of 1949, as amended, so as to bring that section in consonance with the amendments made in the Acts cited in (b) above.

"The bill repeals the Federal Employees Compensation benefits for members of the reserve components of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps authorized by the Act of July 15, 1939, as amended (5 U.S.C. 797) and section 304 of the Naval Reserve Act of 1938, as amended (34 U.S.C. 855c).

"The Department of Defense strongly favors the purpose of this bill as the benefits now available to the dependents of military persons who die while in a retired status are extremely meager. The maximum that a widow of a retired member may receive who has no minor children would be $75 a month if her husband died from a service-connected disability incurred in time of war or $60 a month if he died from a service-connected disability incurred in time of peace. The widow of a retired member would receive but $48 a month if her husband had a war time disability but that disability was not the cause of his death, and then only if her income was less than $1400 a year. Dependent children add to these benefits a small amount, which ceases when the children become 18 years of age. Thus the surviving dependents of a great many retired members of the Armed Forces who may have served long and honorably are entitled to no benefits because of that service. The system which this bill would establish is, it is believed, actuarially sound and would provide a much needed benefit for the surviving dependents of retired members of the Armed Forces.

"While the subject bill as drafted would accomplish its purpose, there are certain substantive and technical changes which appear necessary for its equitable administration. Also, it is believed, that the amendments to existing law, contained in sections 15, 16, and 17 should be omitted from the bill as they are not germane to the subject matter of the bill. A revised draft of the bill embodying these changes, together with a sectional analysis of the revised draft, is enclosed.

"The Department of the Navy, on behalf of the Department of Defense, recommends enactment of the subject bill as set forth in the enclosed revised draft.

"Enactment of this measure should involve no additional cost to the Government other than a small administrative cost. The deductions to be made in the retired pay of retired members electing to provide an annuity for their dependents would be determined by the actuarial equivalent method, which means that the deductions in pay during the member's lifetime would be sufficient to pay for the benefits accruing to his dependents after his death, thus insuring no increased cost in the member's retirement benefits.

"This report has been coordinated within the Department of Defense in accordance with procedures prescribed by the Secretary of Defense.

"There has been insufficient time to obtain advice from the Bureau of the Budget as to the relationship of this report to the program of the President.

"For the Secretary of the Navy.

"Sincerely yours,

IRA H. NUNN
Rear Admiral USN
Judge Advocate General of the Navy"

Retired Officer Assn. Suggests Amendments To Proposed Survivor Benefits Legislation

The Retired Officer Association, through its legislative counsel, Rear Adm. Allen P. Mullinix, USN-Ret., this week recommended changes to the Survivor Benefits legislation sponsored by Representative Cole.

Here are excerpts from the statement of Admiral Mullinix to a House Armed Services Subcommittee:

"We testified on 19 Sept. 1951 on a similar bill, H.R. 5169, 82d Congress, and the statement I am about to give is substantially the same as we gave on that occasion, modified as made necessary by the different features of the bills involved.

"The purpose of this bill is to provide adequate benefits for the survivors of retired personnel of the uniformed services at rates within the reach of servicemen. No such benefits have heretofore been provided. The Retired Officers Association strongly supports any legislation which will accomplish such a purpose, and, if this bill can be amended to do this, will recommend its enactment. . . .

"One of the factors of the problems of providing survivor benefits for retired personnel is the question of whether such provisions would be actuarially sound. In pursuit of the answer to this question, the Retired Officers Association engaged the services of a competent insurance actuary to make a study and report to the Association. Such a report was made and in turn submitted by the Association to Secretary of Defense Forrestal in February 1948. The conclusion of this actuary was to the effect that the inclusion of retired military personnel within the plan then under consideration would be entirely feasible and would in no way violate sound actuarial principles, provided that contributions towards such plan were adequate and the plan itself was permanent.

"In June of 1950 at hearings on the bill

H.R. 8035, which in our opinion was both inadequate and impractical, the Retired Officers Association pledged its whole-hearted support of a practical measure that would give realistic benefits to survivors of those in the uniformed services beyond the meager pensions provided by law.

Most Serious Deficiency

"It is a generally recognized fact that the most serious deficiency in the retirement provisions for service personnel lies in the area of survivor benefits for retired personnel. This is the inescapable conclusion that must be reached by anyone who studies the subject. I have no doubt that the members of this committee know this or will thoroughly appreciate it before the conclusion of these hearings.

"The Retired Officers Association is aware that H.R. 2521 seeks to fill a long recognized vacuum and represents a step in the right direction. It believes, however, that the bill in its present form will fall short in effecting its purpose, in that participation in the program of proposed benefits will be beyond the reach of the majority of retired members, including those now on the retired lists and those who will hereafter be placed on the retired lists, whose survivors are the very individuals who need these benefits most.

Pay Drastically Reduced

"The survivors of members who are retired and on inactive duty do not receive the gratuitous indemnity, do not receive the six months basic pay, nor, in many instances, do they receive the meager Veterans Administration benefits. The pay of these members has been drastically reduced due to their retirement and release to inactive duty. Many of them who retired prior to 1 October 1949 received no increase in pay under the Career Compensation Act and are accordingly existing on the 1908 retired pay standards. They are for the most part handicapped by physical or mental disabilities or advanced age. Their opportunities for gainful employment are reduced or entirely eliminated due to their physical or mental condition or because of numerous and, in some instances unnecessary, Federal laws restricting their employment. Comparatively few have been able to create any sort of competency for themselves and family from the pay of their military careers for reasons that I am sure are well known to members of the committee. Only a few have, from independent means, such as inheritance or otherwise, been able to provide adequate financial protection for their surviving dependents. In brief, the vast majority of retired personnel are, in these days of increased and increasing living costs, extended to the full limit of their financial capabilities to exist. Our Association knows this through direct contact with its members. The great majority of them find it increasingly difficult to provide the mere necessities of life. Many are actually suffering hardships from which they are unable to extricate themselves and others have had their standards of living reduced far below the point of government expectation or desire.

"In such circumstances there is a real problem which must be solved in order to accord them the benefits of this bill. It is a patent fact that the survivors of retired personnel need such benefits to even a greater degree than those of active personnel because their surviving widows and parents are generally older and less able, by comparison, to provide for themselves.

"I would be less than frank if I did not point out that the tax, so to speak, imposed by this bill, will destroy the opportunity for the benefits intended for the vast majority of all members heretofore and hereafter retired. The cost for the annuities provided will simply be too great for the retired personnel to assume.

"Career Plan" Proposed

"While the problem relative to retired members is in every sense a real one it is by no means in our opinion an insolvable one. The plan could—and probably should—be a career one covering a member from his induction into military service until his severance therefrom. Such a plan could be self-supporting as to all who become members of uniformed services in the future, and as to those who are now members, could be supported by them with additional appropriate government contributions to supply the equivalent of their previous non-payments. Such a plan, as a long range proposition, would be highly beneficial to the government. It would, as to those involved, from the date of its inception once and for all solve the troublesome question of pensions which has so concerned the United States Government.

"It should be noted that this proposal to provide benefits for survivors of members of the uniformed services will, it is believed, be the only government sponsored program of its kind in which there is relatively no cost to the government involved. It is reported that consulting actuaries employed by the Bureau of the Budget, for the purpose of outlining comparative benefits of the various Federal employees' retirement and survivor benefit systems, have revealed in effect that none of the now so-called non-contributory systems are, in fact, totally non-contributory. For instance, the Civil Service retirement system which includes survivor benefits is supported by a contribution of 6% by the government and approximately 6½% by the employee. The government's contributions vary as to all other systems which include survivor benefits, running as high as 100% in the case of the Federal Employee Compensation, 22.78% in the Foreign Service System, and 30% in District of Columbia Policemen and Firemen System, as against a 5% contribution by employees under the latter two systems. In view of this it would seem that there is no sound or just reason why the members of the uniformed services who have so long been without adequate survivor benefits, should now be singled out to be the first and only group to bear the full burden of such a system. On the other hand there is the sound reason that those who most directly, at great personal risks, defend the nation should not be discriminated against in safe-guarding their own dependents.

Defects Cited

"In addition to the prohibitive cost to retired members pointed out above it is believed the proposed bill contains the following material defects:

a.) It does not provide benefits for the surviving dependent parents of retired members. Certainly dependent parents are entitled to the same protection afforded other dependents.

b.) In providing benefits for the widow and children of a retired member options (A), (B) and (C) of section 4(a) of the bill makes irrevocable his election to come under the plan. Such member must designate his then wife and children and continue to make payments throughout the remainder of his life even though his designated beneficiaries all predecease him. Option (D) would however permit the reduction of retired pay to be restored on the death of all designated beneficiaries.

c.) The bill does not affirmatively state that the benefits payable thereunder are not to be considered as income for income tax purposes. By present law it is believed that the proposed annuities would be taxable to the extent that their value exceeds the amount of contributions to the fund.

d.) The bill requires an election by retired members within 120 days after its enactment, but contains no requirement that such personnel be notified by the department to which they are attached of the existence of the right to participate. The time should be extended to at least one year and such notice should be required.

e.) The bill provides no benefits for the surviving dependents of deceased personnel. Such survivors need and should be accorded benefits. In considering a survivors' benefit bill it is difficult to say that the survivor of a member of the uniformed services who died the day before its enactment is not entitled to the benefits accorded the survivors of a member who dies the day after its enactment. The reasons which justify and require a survivor benefits plan justify and require the inclusion without discrimination, of all survivors. This is another place where government contribution to the fund would solve the problem.

"It is recommended that the above indicated suggestions be considered in order that the bill may be made to better serve the purpose for which it is to be enacted.

"In conclusion the Retired Officers Association wishes to again assure the committee that it has long advocated and does now support the enactment of a survivor benefit plan that will provide adequate benefits for survivors of members of the armed forces active and retired which will be within the reach and financial capabilities of such members. It believes that the bill now before this Committee can be so modified as to accomplish such a plan, but that contributions by the government will be necessary to provide benefits for the survivors of deceased members and supplementary contributions will be initially necessary to effect the purpose of the bill as to retired members."

AF Personnel Services

A 30-day course in personnel services designed to train officers entering this field has been initiated at Scott AFB, Ill.

The study has been divided into three distinct phases, with 60 hours of training allotted to each part.

The special services section is devoted to recreation, athletics, libraries, theatres and community services lectures and demonstrations.

The Information and Education phase will cover discussions, operating base newspapers, maintaining radio stations, educational problems such as USAFI, off-information centers and various types of duty education, and extension courses.

The third part of the course will deal with personal affairs, which will include staffing and manning requirements, techniques for interviewing and counseling, assistance organizations such as the Red Cross and Salvation Army, and lectures decorations, casualty reporting and dependents' assistance.

Chemical Corps Research-Development Chief Tells Progress of Vital Program

nor the industrialist alone can meet our responsibilities. They must work together as a closely integrated team with the continuity and the bulk of the technical competence coming from the civilian scientist and engineer. The military realism—time-wise and objective-wise—and insistence on ruggedness and simplicity must be furnished by the soldier; fifth: That the bulk of the know-how and skill required in developing and producing pieces of hardware, or in creating and operating production facilities must be furnished by the civilian economy and with a minimum disruption of its normal industrial, educational, or other civilian type pursuits.

What then of the structure within the Chemical Corps which has been created in accordance with these concepts in order to accomplish the mission? Basically, there are seven operating agencies within the Research and Engineering Command—four devoted to research and development per se, two for field testing to insure operability and to furnish engineering and operational data, and one coordinating the transition from the development prototype, or pilot plant stage, to the mass produced end item or production facility.

Serious consideration is being given at this time to the inclusion of an eighth agency—a procurement agency within the Research and Engineering Command itself—geared to insure immediate response to the many legal and administrative problems involved in an annual operating budget of 50 million dollars and a program which has contracts with more than 100 industrial firms, 67 colleges and universities, as well as most of the major independent research organizations in the country. This phase of the program is highlighted by the simple fact that funds contracted for fiscal year 1952 were more than double those for fiscal year 1951.

The four basic operating agencies are the Chemical and Radiological Laboratories, and the Medical Laboratories, located at Army Chemical Center, Md.; the Biological Laboratories located at Camp Detrick, Md., and Fort Terry, the newest and geographically smallest of our facilities, off the tip of Long Island, N. Y. One of our two proving grounds is a relatively small one at Army Chemical Center which performs small scale tests to the extent permitted by the contiguous populated areas and which supervises safari teams performing environmental test missions in arctic and desert regions. The other, Dugway Proving Ground, is located on the vast salt flats near Salt Lake City, Utah. The list of operating agencies is completed by the Engineering Agency at Army Chemical Center which prepares the final design and specifications for all Chemical Corps materiel, designs unit plants and furnishes technical assistance to Chemical Corps plants already in operation.

Above these operating agencies is the Command headquarters. It is organized horizontally, while the operating agencies are organized vertically, in order to insure maximum integration and return from basic research and maximum standardization.

Soldier-Scientists

I would be remiss, indeed, if I completed the description of the Command without some mention of the ESPP's—the enlisted scientific and professional personnel. These soldier-scientists are to be found working in every part of our organization and they have made a major contribution to the success of our program. Their participation in Chemical Corps research and development is a striking illustration of the effective utilization by the Department of the Army of its trained scientific personnel.

As an example of how our organization works, let us follow a chemical agent through its development. The following hypothetical instance will serve to illustrate the cooperation required in all fields of endeavor.

A certain material may be discovered either in the progress of our own research program or by an industrial manufacturer. The manufacturer would recognize the interest which the Chemical Corps might have in this material through his contacts with personnel of the Corps whose full-time duty it is to keep industry informed of the need for such materials. Samples of the new material, with such data as may be available, are furnished to the Chemical and Radiological Laboratories by the manufacturer.

If the material shows promise, additional samples are obtained from the manufacturer or synthesized at our laboratories. Tests necessary to determine the actual toxicity of the material are performed by the Medical Laboratories. With such information at hand, potential use, availability, cost and other factors are considered to decide if the material merits additional study. In this case we will assume that all preliminary screening has shown the material worthy of further investigation.

Manufacturing

Possible methods of manufacturing this material are investigated at the Chemical and Radiological Laboratories. Subsequently, a sufficient quantity is actually produced to furnish Medical Laboratories with experimental lots. Adequate material is also provided for the analytical group to work out analytical procedures, determine the active ingredients, and obtain the chemical formula. Small tests may also be conducted allowing all munitions groups to determine the difficulties that might be experienced—sensitivity to explosives, humidity, temperature and other influencing factors which enter the munitions field.

When all these preliminary tests are well under way, a summary must be made to determine whether this new material has sufficient advantages over approved standardized agents to justify full-scale exploitation by the Chemical Corps. An analysis is made of all factors involved including availability of raw materials, manufacturing facilities and whether a munition is available for use or whether a new one must be developed. Safety of manufacture and handling the new material as well as its storage characteristics as a bulk chemical and in munitions must be considered.

Development

Assuming that this new toxic agent has passed all the above requirements and that the Chemical Corps either has or will develop a suitable munition that will disseminate it properly, the Chemical and Radiological Laboratories are now ready for the full scale development of the material as an agent.

At this time, several other agencies of the Research and Engineering Command cooperate in the development portion of the program. The Engineering Agency collaborates with the Chemical and Radiological Laboratories on the design of the pilot plant and determination of data which will be used later for the design of a full scale production plant. This agency also works with the munitions development group of the laboratories to assure munitions design which will require simple, conventional machine tools. Small scale tests of the new development are carried out by Edgewood Proving Ground at Army Chemical Center.

A cooperative effort among all these groups must be made and the timing schedule of each task closely coordinated in order to supply a munition and agent to meet the over-all schedule of the Chemical Corps. When the pilot plant is completed, sufficient munition is filled for large scale testing by Dugway Proving Ground and for the various using agencies of the Army, Navy, or Air Force as the case may require.

Design Plant

With this basic data, design of a full scale plant is carried forward by the Engineering Agency. Industrial competence and personnel are employed so that the number of persons from the Chemical Corps may be kept to an operating minimum. During this time, specifications of the agent and munitions are worked out in detail, drawings prepared, and the complete munition standardized for use.

This is only one hypothetical example, and the procedure outlined is by no means inflexible. It is, however, fairly typical of the research and development process as it works within the Chemical Corps.

It goes without saying that the work performed in this Command deals with capabilities of offensive as well as defensive operations, and is being prosecuted as vigorously as time, facilities and resources will permit. It goes equally without saying that security considerations dictate that little can, will, or should be published concerning actual items under development or even under production which have not yet, for one reason or another, been committed to operational use.

It is well known that toxic chemical warfare, biological warfare or radiological warfare are not being used offensively by any member of the United Nations. It is equally well known that flame, incendiaries and smoke are being used to excellent effect. These latter are also products of the Chemical Corps and of this Command. Improved fire bombs, improved mixing and supply techniques for incendiary fuels, improved flame equipment and smoke devices have already seen operational or field test use in the Korean war.

Modify Equipment

For example, when the pulse jet smoke generator was tested in Korea, it was found to lack the ruggedness required for actual field use and to be too complicated for operation by troops who had received only minimal training. These considerations made modification necessary so that the generator could be employed effectively by combat soldiers who could be given rapid instruction in the use of the unit. These modifications have been incorporated, and we now have in service in Korea a superior smoke generator which combines effectiveness with ease of operation and maintenance.

The 4.2-inch heavy mortar is an outstanding example of an end product originally conceived by the research and development facilities of the Chemical Corps and now in use by the Army and Marine infantry in Korea. During World War II, and until very recently in the Korean conflict, chemical mortar troops were responsible for the close support firing of the M-2 version of the mortar. After World War II, heavy mortar companies were made organic to the infantry regiments and late last year the chemical mortar battalions were transferred to the infantry and have been redesignated as infantry heavy mortar battalions.

This transfer followed the standardization of an improved design of the 4.2-inch, the M-30 heavy mortar, which is based on Chemical Corps development and further adapted to field requirements by the Ordnance Corps. Thus, a weapon designed by the Chemical Corps for massed toxic fire support and adapted to conventional warfare by chemical mortar troops has been found to have a flexible, universal use in combat by providing massed high explosive, smoke, and incendiary support within the infantry.

New Items

New and superior items in these and other areas exist within the Command in all stages of development. Developmental, as well as operational testing is the order of the day "around the calendar" at all test installations. It might be well here to remind the using soldier, sailor and airman that, by and large, new items will not come out of the supply pipeline until one to three years after they have been completed by the development organization. This so-called lead time is not unique to military production but is also characteristic of civilian industry.

One final thought I would like to leave with the logistician, the planner and the administrator: The progress of military research and development cannot and must not be measured in terms of money spent or man hours consumed. With equal force, the engineer and more par-

THULE AB, GREENLAND. The crew members of a 55th Air Rescue Squadron C-47 at this Northeast Air Command base are proud possessors of a number of hand carved ivory carvings given them by a group of appreciative Eskimos on remote Baffin Island in the Canadian Arctic.

The souvenirs of the northland were given the men after they had successfully landed their ski-equipped plane near the Eskimo village to evacuate an ill child to a mainland hospital.

Taking off from the Northeast Air Command base at Thule, Capt. Nicholas Nedak, pilot, and Capt. John B. Parker and Kenneth E. Olson, navigators, made the flight to Baffin Island in three hours and landed their plane on the rough ice of the frozen sea at Arctic Bay. With the child safely aboard and the Eskimo mementoes in their pockets, the crew took off for Pond Inlet, 150 miles south of Arctic Bay. There they picked up another sick child and an old man.

With weather closing in rapidly, the aircraft again became airborne ten minutes later and headed back to Thule.

Within a few short hours, the patients, were placed aboard one of the big four-engine transports that regularly fly in and out of Thule bound for Goose Bay, Labrador, where the Eskimos are now receiving medical treatment.

Col. Reuben Kyle, Jr., Vice Commander of the Northeast Air Command, said the success of the mercy flight was due to the spirit of friendly cooperation which exists between Canadian, Danish and U. S. officials and the highly proficient crews of the 55th Air Rescue Squadron based at Thule.

C-119 Crews Set Records

New altitude and endurance records for the Fairchild C-119 were set recently by transport crews of the 456th Troop Carrier Wing in tests at Miami, Fla., International Airport.

One plane, piloted by Capt. James L. Hill, commanding officer of the Wing's 746th Troop Carrier Squadron, set a new Flying Boxcar altitude mark by climbing to 30,900 feet, almost six miles above sea level. Accompanying Captain Hill on the flight were Capt. John H. Corbin, copilot, and A/1c Charles W. Morris, flight engineer. The plane carried conventional troop carrier equipment and a 2,000-gallon fuel supply.

A new endurance record for a C-119 without auxiliary fuel cells was set by Capt. William F. Ferreira, of the 745th Squadron, who landed with two hours' fuel supply after remaining aloft for 20 hours and 5 minutes. The plane was piloted by Lt. Charles L. Hunt, with Lt. James A. Rowe as co-pilot, Capt. Milton J. Haas as navigator, and S/Sgt. Jasper T. James and William C. Hanlon as flight engineers.

Uniform Pay Report

The Army Finance Center has mailed out more than a thousand checks covering claims for uniform allowance by officers in Army Reserve components.

To date, three times this number of claims have been made, according to the Adjustment Branch of the Settlement Division. Those for which payment has not been made are in the process of adjudication and payment.

Claims, which arrive at a weekly rate of 450, are processed under the supervision of 1st Lt. Henry L. Motley and other members of the 7th Finance Disbursing Section.

Most claims represent active duty allowance for which $100 is paid. This allowance is paid retroactively to Reserve officers who entered on active duty on or after 25 June 1950, provided two years had elapsed since their last term of active duty.

Navy Will Integrate Former Aviation Cadets

A new policy for the integration of former Naval Aviation Cadets into the Regular Navy was announced recently by Rear Adm. J. F. Bolger, Deputy Chief of Naval Personnel.

All former NavCadets, commissioned since 1 July 1951, who have been on active duty continuously for at least 18 months immediately following appointment as Ensign, 1325, USNR, and who were less than 25 years of age when they accepted that appointment, are eligible to apply for integration.

Number Is Limited

BuPers said only a limited number of transferees can be absorbed into the Regular Navy and for that reason "each individual is eligible to apply with his contemporaries once and once only at the appropriate time" and in accordance with the following schedule:

If appointment as Ensign, 1325, USNR, was accepted between the dates listed in "A," below, then the application for integration may be submitted between the dates listed opposite in "B."

"A"	"B"
1 Jul 51 and 31 Dec 51	1 Apr 53 and 30 Jun 53
1 Jan 52 and 30 Jun 52	1 Oct 53 and 31 Dec 53
1 Jul 52 and 31 Dec 52	1 Apr 54 and 30 Jun 54
1 Jan 53 and 30 Jun 53	1 Oct 54 and 31 Dec 54

Will Retain Rank

The directive issued by Admiral Bolger notes that each candidate accepted for appointment will be issued a permanent commission in the grade of ensign with the same date of rank as he now holds. Officers serving in the temporary grade of lieutenant(jg) will be issued a temporary appointment in that grade with the same date of rank as they hold in the U. S. Naval Reserve.

It was pointed out that those selected will be subject "to all provisions of statutory law relating to distribution, promotion, retirement and discharge of officers of the line of the Regular Navy."

Complete details are contained in BuPers Instruction 1120.14, subject, "Appointment of certain Naval Reserve aviators to commissioned grade in the Line of the Regular Navy."

Radio Communications Changes For Korea Divs.

The Army plans to revise completely the radio communications systems of all divisions in Korea by the end of the year.

The initial step in the replacement and standardization of the communications system was completed recently with the introduction to the 39th Field Artillery Battalion of the new integrated series of standardized FM radio sets (AN/GRC 3-8).

Under the direction of Lt. Col. Oscar B. Kusterman of the 8th Army Signal section, two new equipment introduction teams and a group of signal men have been working since February with the artillerymen, installing radios in jeeps and trucks and teaching the operation and maintenance of the improved equipment.

Under the old system, the artillery had available to it 120 channels, but only 10 were readily available. To use the remaining facilities, it was necessary to take apart the radio, change the crystals and retune the set. Since there were 120 separate crystals, one for each channel, the process was costly in both time and labor.

With the new radios, however, all 120 frequencies are instantaneously available at the flick of the switch, with 12 crystals serving for all channels.

The old system allotted 120 channels to artillery and 80 to armor, or a total of 200 channels for an entire division. The new system will assign 120 frequencies to the artillery, as before, but will provide 170 channels for the joint use of infantry and armor, thus making available 90 more channels than previously.

The standardization of the new systems among the divisions in Korea will enable infantry, artillery and armor to talk to each other directly, a process which involved many difficulties in the past.

Ft. Knox Center Opens

Ft. Knox, Ky., is now serving as a reception center to replace the one being closed at Ft. Custer, Mich. The center, which will be commanded by Col. James C. Gabriel, will initially serve lower Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Southern Illinois, but eventually will receive inductees from Kentucky and Tennessee.

Two Platoon Shift

would necessitate changes in the basic training program, now geared to the requirements of providing individual replacements.

One possibility is the division of the basic training program into two parts and the addition of two weeks training with special emphasis on the platoon organization.

It has been proposed that embarkation leave be given not at the end of basic training, but between the 8th and 9th weeks.

After this leave, draftees would receive 10 weeks instruction during the second half of their training at the end of which platoon units could be shipped to embarkation ports.

Under most favorable conditions, military officials would like to go to battalion size replacement units, but demands of the Korean rotation program are said to make such a change impracticable at the present time.

Chemical Corps Research

ticularly the scientist, needs to appreciate that the mere extension of knowledge is not a sufficient and final measuring device. The final measurement is made after that knowledge is applied to the production of new concepts and weapons or improved defensive techniques and devices.

While the extension and application of knowledge continue as guide lines of our program, our immediate goals are specific, well defined and attainable.

Army Lt. Col. Board

The board to recommend Army majors for temporary promotion to lieutenant colonel, which had been expected to meet this week, now is scheduled to hold its first session on or about 9 June, it was reported this week.

The board undoubtedly will announce its selections in small and frequent groups, as is being done with the current promotions to major and captain.
